The 160-Character Solution

Anderson and Burkhauser, using mortality experience in subsequent years of the RHS, show that such a measure yields quite different results than a self-reported measure of health on the labor force participation behavior of a cross section of men aged 16-64. Haveman and Wolfe use a self-reported measure of health rather than a more objective measure. The proposed method combines various kinds of time-series data into a model and we conduct comparative analysis using synthetic and real datasets.
